LA FOLLETTE MAKES BITTER ATTACK ON PRES. HARDING

DENOUNCES ARMS PARLEY TREATIES AS IMPERIALISM. FEARS MORE WAR

Senior Senator at Milwaukee Begins Campaign for Re-election.

Milwaukee—The "win pillars" of the American nation—freedom and independence—are today being battered down by the vandals of privilege and monopoly who have secured control of every branch of government, and are using its great powers, both in domestic and foreign policy, to protect and extend their enormous wealth.

Senator La Follette, in an address delivered here Sunday afternoon in an address at a meeting in commemoration of General Frederick von Steuben, German revolutionary leader.

The Washington campaign, which he declared to be the only primary object to make the world safe for imperialism, was condemned by the senator, who attacked the administration of President Harding for its policy of appeasement, and its failure to check upon the congressional prerogatives, hampering the agricultural bloc and attempting to thwart passage of the soldier bonus bill.

Harding, checked with Wilson, the senator declared, "whether it will return to the fundamental principles which their government was established to build upon, or whether they will follow the path along which Woodrow Wilson and Warren G. Harding have attempted to lead them of becoming a great western empire, a party to the world's intrigues, hated by all peoples and respected by none."

"Never in the entire history of this country," the senator continued, "have there been such powerful influences at work to destroy all the liberties that have made the Republic what it is today, and to respect throughout the world. Now."

Bushel of Money Buys But Small Bit of Food in Russia

Miss Hazel S. Corwin holding several million rubles, worth less than $10.

Bushels of little buy little for the hungry Russian. A bushel of such as is being held by Hazel S. Corwin of a Cleveland, O., department store, would barely buy $10 worth of American food in Russia.

The little in the basket range from 10 to 150 ruble notes, the latter containing beautiful, engraved portraits of Peter the Great and Empress Catherine.

BUSINESS BETTER IN UNITED STATES, DECLARES HARDING

DATA FROM COMPTROLLER OF CURRENCY IS QUOTED. TAKES NO CREDIT "Frozen Credits" Becoming Thawed Out, Banking Reports Indicate.

By DAVID LAWRENCE.

Copyright 1921, by Janesville Gazette.

Washington—Business is better, President Harding says so and offers figures and statistics to confirm his optimistic view. Hereafter his expressions about the business situation have been general in character and tinged with a vague hopefulness that the depression must sooner or later come to an end.

Now, however, with a smile of happiness on his face, the president takes occasion to analyze the latest data received by the comptroller of the currency.

The president explained that his purpose was neither political nor partisan. Mr. Harding is no more anxious to claim credit for the better turn in business affairs than was Mr. Wilson in the same position. He takes responsibility for the economic depression which became acute in the six months of his term of office.

The day is passing when politicians are claiming that they are able to bring about the recovery of the country when at the same time it has been demonstrated that the policy of a government to economic factors of worldwide extent. This does not prevent the politicians from making all sorts of claims for the credit in business affairs that they are making an upward turn in the present conditions.

Better Credits

President Harding, however, has another object in view. He plans to inform the people that the data in the possession of the government shows a marked improvement in the credit situation.

The president's explanation of the present situation, which will be business, is not a political statement. There are still many things in the American mind that would benefit themselves and the country but who hesitate on account of "the business situation."

RACINE FARMER IS BELIEVED VICTIM IN CREEK MURDER

MOTHER'S LETTER LEADS TO IDENTIFICATION. IS REPORT.

RECOGNIZE PHOTO

Body Thought That of Edward Thielen, Who Worked as Farm Hand.

Milwaukee—A report from Palmyra Monday morning says the victim of the Middle Creek murder near Racine, the middle of December, is believed to be Edward Thielen, whose home was rural route number 1, out of Racine. A picture of the slain man was furnished by a truck driver. The picture was carried by a man in Palmyra. He showed it to the truck driver, who said positively to have identified it as the man who worked for him near East Troy. The man had left his farm before the murder and had said he was going to his home in Racine.

Edward S. of Racine

"Thielen drove an automobile that belonged to him and had a large sum of money," Mr. Taft said. "I did not connect him with the murder, but I knew since I was sure he had gone to Racine."

"My son did not write very frequently, but I was worried a few weeks ago and wrote to him at East Troy," Mrs. Thielen said. "The letter came back unanswered and I then wrote to the man for whom I knew he worked. He told me that Edward had started for home about 15 days ago and it is said, identified her son from the description residents gave her as the man who was murdered."

Friend Is Watching

Authorities were unwilling to give out much information concerning the man whom they say is under surveillance. It was said that he had been in the area of the murder for some time. A friend of the Thielen family, who worked on a farm near East Troy, he is thought to have met Thielen and drove with him into the country and left him for his car, money and clothes.

Residents of East Troy say the man is believed to have committed the murder. He was seen near East Troy, dressed in Thielen's clothing, driving the auto, he disappeared from the farm, where he worked shortly after this, but was not seen again. Thielen was not known as a character in the community and that Thielen was dead and they knew.

Call 2,500—New Gazette Number for All Departments

Call 2500 for all departments of the Gazette. That is the new number. It will give you the switch board in the Gazette office and you will be connected with any department you may wish.

For so long that the oldest can remember no other number the Gazette telephone has been 77. It was easy to remember, but 2500 is just as easy.

Since the Rock County telephone lines have been taken over by the Bell company, there has been some confusion. Five trunk lines run into the Gazette office and connect with a switch board and the Gazette's own private operator.

It was found that the change would be necessary for prompt service. In the years of '77 and its brother number '76 it would be an interesting thing to know how many calls had come to the Gazette.

Every sort of a question has been asked. The Gazette invites these questions. If in doubt, ask the Gazette. It may be that the question can be answered at once and then again it may have to be looked up. Some of the questions are knotty but usually the information is at hand and can be given readily. The Gazette wants the public to feel that the telephone 2500 is theirs and at their service.

Get the 2500 habit.

Here is a morning's questions asked of the Gazette: "What is the population of Orfordville?" "When was the Pestigo fire?" "Who is the head of the state vocational schools?" "Can we file a corporation income tax on fiscal year?" "Is Jack Dempsey married?" And so on.

Get the habit. Call 2500 and ask for the department with which you wish to talk.

OVER OLD WORLD INFLUENZA SWEEPS

Industry Handicapped; Disease Not So Virulent as Before.

New York.—A sinister horseman is abroad in the old world. Europe, still sick in mind and body from the invasion of the four deadly horsemen, is now being swept by the influenza epidemic. The disease, while not so virulent as it was on its last visit two years ago, is spread over a greater area and a greater number of cases have been reported.

In Edinburgh twenty-two thousand pupils, or 35 per cent of the school children, have been reported ill. Municipal services also are badly hit, while business firms say that staffs are affected to the extent of 10 or 15 per cent.

In Copenhagen six thousand cases were reported in a week. The Danish army is particularly hard hit, more than five thousand soldiers being in the hospital.

Mild Form in Paris.

It is a mild form of the influenza that has invaded Paris. Several thousand cases have been received at the hospitals of the city and now the average of twenty cases a day are reported. Those affected are, as a rule, ill only a week and then they can be discharged. In other parts of France the sick list constitutes a smaller percentage.

Curfew has been hit.

Lack of proper hospital facilities and medical attention makes the epidemic more dangerous. Curfew cases a day are being reported in Constantinople.

Courts have not been able to sit in parts of Scotland on account of the illness of a number of the judges.

The last six weeks of the epidemic have had more death with more than three thousand cases. At Dunfermline one thousand cases have been reported. At Lennoxton, near Milton, scarcely a home has escaped the disease.

Predicted Return of Disease.

It has been recalled in London, that as long ago as November, 1919, an eminent medical authority prophesied the present epidemic. He presented a periodicity curve which showed that a recrudescence of the disease was due in January.

The registrar general's weekly return of births and deaths in London and the ninety-five other great towns shows that in the administrative county of London, including the city, the deaths from influenza number 151, as against 14, 45 and 54 in the preceding three weeks.

In the 56 great towns, which include Greater London and four Scottish and Irish towns, the total number of deaths from influenza is 418.

The present influenza epidemic is one of the most serious since the war.

In Southwest Germany many there are few families that have not suffered.

50,000 in Frankfurt.

Some fifty thousand have been reported in Frankfurt, a town of about one-half million inhabitants. All the hospitals are overcrowded, and only patients who have developed inflammation of the lungs are taken in.

School holidays at Frankfurt have been extended. Doctors are so overworked that they can only visit patients with high fever.

At Dortmund a third of the staff in the telegraph office are laid up, so that delivery of telegrams has had to be curtailed. Cases of death are particularly frequent between the ages of 20 and 40.

In North Germany the influenza has not been so severe. In Berlin the worst is over, and the epidemic is not so malignant as the several wartime epidemics of influenza. During the three summer months of 1918 one hundred fifty thousand cases were fatal in Germany.

LA FOLLETTE MAKES "IMPERIALISM" HIS CAMPAIGN ISSUE

have the American people been in such danger of losing their liberty and sacrifices for the independence of the United States is being destroyed," he declared, "by the constant encroachments of the executive and judicial branches upon the rights and powers of congress."

Criticism President Harding

"President Harding, it would seem, either did not take the meaning of the last election seriously to heart, or has forgotten it altogether, for on July 12, 1921, when the bill to provide compensation for the veterans of the world war was under consideration, he so far overstepped the prerogatives of his office as to appear before the senate and argue against the passage of the pending measure."

"This is the president in this unconstitutional act were the guiding forces of plutocracy and special privilege, who were bitterly opposed to the enactment of legislation to provide substantial relief for the veterans of the world war, and who had exhausted their enormous machinery of influence and propaganda in an effort to defeat this all too meager compensation for the young men who gave their lives for their country."

"Think of it! Nine hundred thousand veterans of the world war, to whom had been promised every consideration while the conflict was being waged, were out of work and penniless, and yet these men were denied relief on the specious pretext that a treasury which was full enough to give $500,000,000 to the railroads, to squander other hundreds of millions on the shipping board, would be bankrupted by affording them a measure of compensation for their sacrifices, to which they were entitled, and which the American people wanted them to have."

As to Senator Kenyon

"The mild insinuation on behalf of agriculture," Senator La Follette said, referring to the agricultural bloc, "coupled with the action of some of the more independent members of the bloc in partially reducing the super-tax rates upon large incomes, was the moving cause of the determination on the part of the president and the other temporary leaders of the republican party to break down the agricultural bloc and to destroy its effectiveness by removing from the senate one of its leaders."

"Turning to a discussion of foreign policies, Senator La Follette said that the lesson of the defeat of the league of nations by congress had apparently been lost on the present administration, or else, he declared, "the forces which control President Harding are so powerful that they both prefer political extinction to resistance of their dictates."

"The link is hardly yet dry," the senator said, upon the signatures of the delegates of the United States to new treaties and a new alliance which in many respects are more iniquitous and fraught with greater perils to the United States than was the treaty of Versailles."

"These treaties and the new alliances which they contain, have only one primary object—to make the world safe for imperialism. They are the abolition of the chances of war, is the keynote of the treaty for naval limitation. It was to save taxes and to prevent bankruptcy of the British empire that all the rest of the world was released to insure the success of the Washington conference."

"The Four Power Treaty is nothing more or less than a binding alliance with the three great imperialist nations of the present time, which pledges the United States to place all her resources of men and money at their disposal whenever they are attacked."

"When war comes and a nation is attacked, her possessions in every quarter of the globe are attacked. So it is that we will be bound, if we ratify this treaty, to send our sons once more to the assistance of the British empire if any of the oppressed peoples who are today crushed under the heel of her government should dare to rise in open rebellion and make war against her."

"So will we be bound, if we ratify this treaty, to send our ships and our men to the assistance of Japan when the shackled giant China attempts to rise and throw off the domination which the Washington conference has sealed and delivered to Japan over all of China and Siberia."

"It will also to direct your attention to the fact that iniquitous as are the provisions of the four power pact, it is its full meaning unless we have some knowledge of the secret agreements and understandings which undoubtedly accompany it."

"I say 'undoubtedly' because it was only through the happy accident of a blundering statement by President Harding that the American people were able to discover that a secret agreement had already been arrived at by Secretary Hughes and the delegates of Great Britain, France, and Japan, that the four power treaty served to guarantee the mainland of Japan and not merely her long line of insular possessions."

La Follette Irreconcilable

"The wonderful structure of government which the fathers of this country drew their blood to build rests upon two great foundation stones—freedom and independence," Senator La Follette said. "Freedom in domestic affairs, independence in foreign relations."

"Freedom meant not only the absence of arbitrary restraints and despotic tyrannies, but also equality of opportunity for the development of the individual, and the right to be subject to no other nation, even upon terms of equality, to advance their schemes of imperialism and conquest."

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Editor Gazette:

After reading in a discussion relating to Dr. Woodworth in Tuesday's paper a statement referring to his wife earning $125 a month teaching, I could not refrain from sending in this article, which I think should be of interest to those of us who are and have been teachers.

Why should a woman who has spent hundreds of dollars for an education for her training be barred from her profession because of her marriage? Her training has been only for the purpose of enabling her to support herself until she could find a man to do so?

Very often do we hear the criticism of our teachers. "This teacher is teaching only for the money she gets. She cares nothing for the work, the students or the school. She's only teaching herself over until she can be married!" Then when we find one devoted to her profession, whose interest in her work and the lives of her students is so successful that she gets it her duty to continue her work, she is criticised, or rejected by a superintendent because she is married.

I have in my mind as I write a woman in this city who, a year ago, applied for a position in our high school. This woman has an enviable reputation as a teacher in this state. It has been considered an honor to have been in her classes during the years of her experience in high school work. Her recommendations are of the highest. Inspectors, principals and superintendents speak in the highest terms of her work. Yet she is rejected because she is married.

"I wonder would we spend our money educating our daughters to be teachers if we thought that these girls, when married, if forced to start their living, would be rejected because they were 'married women'?" Had this woman, referred to above, been a stenographer or clerk she would have been able to have obtained a position, full time or part time, without any further delay.

Now it seems to me that positions of teaching, as well as in other lines, should be given to those with the best qualifications, who have had the experience, and who have been the most successful. Proud as I am of our new and long-needed high school building, I would like to add that it is not the building that makes the student but the teacher into whose hands he is placed. Let us parents desire to have our children in the care of steady, dignified men and women, old enough to understand them and to be a help and example for them.

TEACHER.

Editor, Gazette:

President Birge of the University of Wisconsin in his reply to W. J. Bryan on the subject of science and evolution, has made some statements to which I wish to call attention.

Speaking of science and revelation, Dr. Birge says: "I have accepted the equally divine revelation that is a noble confession if by it he means that the book of nature and of revelation having the same authority, there can be no conflict between them. And particularly so as both science and revelation appear to the same method of inquiry, the truth or falsity of any proposition: verification by experience."

But it is equally important to remember that while revelation and science are equally divine, the workings of God's will, they differ in purpose. Science may show us how the heavens go, but revelation shows us how to go to heaven."

Dr. Birge speaks of "uniting religion with a discredited scientific hypothesis." That discredited scientific hypothesis, I take it, is the Bible story of creation. He does not then accept revelation as divine except when it conforms with his theory of evolution. I submit that it is Dr. Birge who is uniting a discredited scientific hypothesis to religion in substituting Darwinian evolution or modification thereof for the Bible account of the origin of matter and life.

A discredited scientific hypothesis. Who is attempting to unite religion with a discredited scientific hypothesis but Dr. Birge and his fellow evolutionists who must needs send out a group of scientists ever and anon to scour the earth for the missing link between man and the monkey? It is a noble mission these men have in seeking to connect man with the monkey rather than with God.

Dr. Birge continues: "Another thing that seems a trouble Mr. Bryan is the fact that I told him his teachings were atheistic rather than the teachings of evolution." Now Mr. Bryan accepts the authority of the Bible and bases his teachings on the origin of man upon the scriptures, therefore he is an atheist. Well, then if accepting the Bible account of the origin of man rather than the guess-work of the evolutionists be atheism, then Christ and the Apostles were atheists and Mr. Bryan is in good company.

They told me that we bear an image of God because of God's work in creation. "I am a son of God," says Dr. Birge, "but they never thought of telling us that God sent forth His spirit to create in His image every day that is born." Dr. Birge tells us that what stage in the course of evolution in the remote past God began to "send forth His spirit to create in His image every day that is born." Was it slightly before or after the monkey stage? Dr. Birge had a real meaning and purpose in thus calling the attention of Mr. Bryan definitely and sharply to the religious harm that may come from his teaching. But Dr. Birge, from his teaching, says that Mr. Bryan is championing the Bible account of creation as against Birge's evolutionistic view of the origin of man. Now Birge for harm not from evolution but from the continued teaching that God in the remote past created man in His image.

A tree is known by its fruits. What fruit is evolution bearing? A few years ago Prof. J. H. Leuba of Bryn Mawr college published a book in which he shows that belief in God and immortality is passing away. He says that half of the prominent scientists, biologists, sociologists, psychologists, do not believe in a personal God or personal immortality. Then he shows the results of a canvass of the students of the twelve representative colleges with the startling disclosure that whereas the percentage of believers are 55 percent in the freshman class, the number decreases until the senior class. He shows there has been a falling away of from 40 to 45 percent who neither believe in a personal God or personal immortality.

Dr. Birge says he accepts revelation and science as both equally divine. "By their fruits ye shall know them." A "science," so-called, that undermines one's belief in God and immortality is not divine but in league with hell. The Bible account of the origin of man and that of evolution are apart as far as the poles. One must accept the one and reject the other; they cannot be true. And we have the best of evidence for believing that it is Dr. Birge's atheism and not Bryan's that is working harm upon religion.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

George Morton goes to work at the home of Platter, a rich man, when his father loses all his money. George becomes a horse trainer and as a part of the job acts as groom to Sylvia Platter when she goes to the races. Sylvia is drawn from her home and thinking her unconscious, George kisses her, calling out to her lover's name. She drives him from the place and George threatens her brother, who goes to horsepicking him, but in a fair fight, he seeks an education, goes to Princeton, meets Bailey, a tutor, gets a place on the football team and aids his college to win from Harvard. He makes many acquaintances. He has determined that Sylvia Platter shall marry him and meets her again and times, each time seemingly widening the breach between them. But he continues in the determination. Betty Allison is very kind to him. At her home he meets her friend, Sylvia, which is embarrassing.

"You don't mean you've been over to Governor's Island?"

Blodgett stood up.

"Yes," he confessed solemnly. "Just not back from my physical examination. Would you wouldn't have me, because I'm too fat? Called it obese, instead of just my natural inclination to fatness."

One of his pudgy hands struck his chest.

"Never stopped to see that my heart's all right, and that's what you want, people whose hearts are all right."

Momentarily the enmity aroused by circumstances died from George. The man was genuine, suffering from a devastating disappointment; but surely he hadn't called him down stairs only to witness this outburst. Blodgett lowered himself to his chair. He wiped his face with one of his gray handkerchiefs. He spoke reasonably.

"My place is home. All right. I'll make it easier then for the people who can't go. I'm going to look after you boys. Mandy's not big enough. I've got a man in view I can keep tabs on, and Blodgett'll always be sitting down here seeing you don't get stung."

He sighed profoundly.

"What are you going to do for my share?"

George would rather have had the man curse him. It struck directly at his pride to submit to this unmeaning of his jealous opinions. He straightened his back and looked at George. He grasped Blodgett's hand, to beg his pardon. Instead he tried to find ways of avoiding the generous gift.

"We can't settle anything yet. A dozen circumstances may arise. The way may end—"

"When you go, George," Blodgett said, "and George knew that in the end he couldn't refuse without disclosing."

Dinner Stories

"Thanks for this beer preservation, doctor. It will certainly save my life."

"I hope so," said the physician, dryly.

"And, by the way, I'm a little out of touch with the sources of supply. Do you know whether or not druggists are going to sell pretzels?"

"He proposed to me last night, mother. What shall I do?"

"But my dear daughter, you've only known him three weeks."

"I know that, mother, but on the other hand if I delay in accepting him he might find out some things about me he won't like, too."

"The little boy met the expected visitor half way to the garden path."

"Rather. Mother's sure to cut the cake now."

"Tinker Bob" Stories

by Carlyle H. Holcomb

MRS. ELEPHANT SENDS OUT A TRUMPET CALL

Now I want to tell you about Tim, the young son of Johnny Elephant. Tim was a playful fellow. The name of his father's business was "Elephant's." But Tinker Bob didn't know any other name for him but Tim. Every time he saw his father coming Tim would run out of the kitchen to meet him.

Speaking of the kitchen, it is hard to find a place where there is no kitchen. Do you know, you're nearer paying me back than you've ever been."

George was uncomfortable before such adulation.

"Please don't think," he protested, "that I'm going over for any tricky trick or to save a lot of advanced thinkers from their utter folly."

"Then what are you going for?" Bailey asked.

George was surprised that he looked so anxious to reach for his hand. "Oh, because one has to go," he evaded.

Tim's smile was contented.

"What better reason could any man want?"

Tim had an air of showing him about Princeton as if he must absorb its beauties for the last time. Their visit to the Altons was shrouded with all the sultry accompaniments of a permanent farewell. George was inclined to smile. He hadn't got as far as weighing his chances of being hit; the present was too crowded, crowded too far; included Betty, for instance, and Lambert whom he was surprised to find in the crowd. They had come to remain evidently until he should leave for Plattsburgh. The Altons' indignities centered rather obviously on Lambert. George, when he took Betty's hand to say good-bye that evening, felt with a desolate regret that for the first time in all their acquaintance her fingers failed to reach his hand.

PART IV. THE FOREST

"PROFESSION"

Member of the firm of Morton, Platter, and Goodhue.

Slightly startled, a fairly youthful product of West Point looked on the uncomfortable elderly room chair, and glanced from the name on George's card to the tall, well-built figure in a private's uniform facing him. George knew he looked like a soldier, because some comical idiot had blantly told him so coming up on the train; but he hadn't the first knowledge to support appearances; didn't even know how to stand at attention, was making an effort at it now since it was clearly expected of him, because he had sense enough to guess that the pompous, slightly ungrammatical young man would insist during the next three months on many such tributes.

"I see. You're the Morton."

George was pleased the young man was impressed. He experienced again the feelings with which he had gone to Princeton. He was being weighed, not as skillfully as Bailey had done it, but in much the same fashion. He had a quick thought that it was going to be nice to be at school again.

"Any special qualifications of leadership?"

The question took George by surprise. He hesitated. A yes-or-no answer, sitting by to help, asked:

"Wasn't you captain of the Princeton football team a few years ago?"

"Yes, but we were beaten."

"The families, in the desperation of usual, decided again to tolerate each other."

BEAUTY CHATS by Edna Kent Forbes

My mail is always full of letters from readers asking what can be done for superfluous hair on the face and body. The best treatment, of course, is electrolysis, for if this is well done, it is a permanent cure. It is not very dangerous, however, there is always the danger of tiny scars on the skin. It is not painful as many people imagine, merely prickly, sometimes unpleasantly so.

There is another way to remove superfluous hair, that is to cover the affected part of the skin with warm wax, let cool, harden and then pull off. This treatment pulls out all the hairs.

It is a fairly painful process, and, personally, I do not think that the benefits are sufficiently great to balance the irritation caused by pulling.

Slice when cold.
